Youth Week Focuses on Trust

Trust in youth. What does it mean? Is it just a catchy phrase? Or merely a suggestion of confident hope? No-it indicates the confidence which Americans have in the ability of youth to meet the challenges of today.

Our young people manifest an alert awareness of happenings in the world; they exhibit an earnest effort to prepare for a stable future; they indicate their willingness to meet these challenges.

Frequently we read about juvenile delinquency but rarely about the accomplishments of youth.

Next week seven million Catholic young men and women will participate in National Catholic Youth Week. The observance is aimed at emphasizing the positive aspect of youth.

An example of this positive approach can be found on the Clarke campus in our system of student government based on the honor principle. Here we have the opportunity to govern ourselves. By the trust which the faculty shows us and which we show one another we can develop a high degree of integrity.

As participants of this plan we learn to discipline ourselves, to accept responsibility, to actualize our potentialities, to develop an awareness of human dignity. We are living in an atmosphere of trust-and we like it.

Youth represents the future, a future which must be met by calm, confident, Christian individuals. Each of us has a role to play in meeting this challenge. Perhaps some of us will be the architects who will plan, design and sketch new blueprints. Others will be the contractors, cementing and molding new ideas to form a firm foundation of truth. Still others will be tuckpointers, resurfacing principles which have decayed through the years. Whatever we do, it will be OUR job, and we must prepare for it now.

We must be worthy of the trust we expect the world to place in us.

Disc-jockey shows are a favorite with Beth Brown, freshman from Epworth:

A campus radio station such as CLRK offers great advantages to the students. Many girls are interested in radio work and need experience before a local station will hire them. It's wonderful that we, as college students, are able to get this experience under skilled directors.

A Des Moines girl, sopho-more Mary Ann Ludwig, enjoyed her parts on CLRK's children's programs last year:

College radio stations like CLRK are a terrific asser to the school. They provide listening entertainment for all students and give some a means of developing hidden talent. Programs such as the Saturday morning story hour rate tops with me, because they offer Clarkites an opportunity for actual script reading. ### Social Science Members Discuss Campaign Issues

Major planks of the Democratic and Republican platforms were discussed in the light of recent campaign speeches at the first meeting of the Social Science club Oct. 18 in the activity room of Mary Frances Clarke

The Democratic party platform was introduced by Dolores Reihle and the Republican platform by Molly Rater. Patricia Oberempt evaluated one of Adlai Stevenson's speeches.

Purpose of the discussion was to familiarize the club members with the fact that each political party has a definite platform or view on current problems and affairs. Participants also attempted to discover whether Mellita Hanten and Sharon Voelz are speaking in accordance with their party platform or are contradicting their earlier campaign speeches.
